⓳ Cities with pop over 10,000: 26 (see page 31 for cities).

This sample entry provides detailed information about the content found in the individual county listings in this directory. Statistics presented in Counties USA include data from the U.S. Bureau of the Census, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis.

❶ Contact. Name of the county (or county-equivalent entity); street and/or postal address; telephone and fax numbers for the county seat; and the county's website.
❷ Description. A brief description of the general location of the county. Information about the county's dates of incorporation or organization, or other background information, may be provided here as well.
❸ Name origin. Historical information about the origin of the county's name.
❹ Area. The total area of the county is given in square miles, followed by individual figures for the land area and water area of the county (also in square miles).
❺ Pop per sq mi. The county's total population per square mile of land area.
❻ Pop 2010. The total population estimate as compiled by the Census Bureau.

❼ State rank. Denotes the county's rank in its state in terms of 2010 total population size.

❽ Pop Change. Indicates the percentage by which the county's population has increased or decreased between the 2005 census and the 2010 population estimate, as well as between the 2000 and 2005 censuses.

❾ Pop 2005. The total population reported in the 2005 census conducted by the US Bureau of the Census, followed (parenthetically) by the racial/ethnic breakdown of the population figures of 2010 census into five categories: White; Black or African American; Hispanic or Latino; Asian; and Other. The "Other" designation includes respondents categorized in the 2010 Census as American Indian/Alaska Native, Native Hawaiian/Other Pacific Islander, or persons who are members of more than one race. If the population of a county includes more than 1% American Indian/Alaska Native or Native Hawaiian/Other Pacific Islander, then this percentage is noted at the end of the racial/ethnic breakdown.

❿ Foreign born. Percentage of the county population born in a country other than the United States.

⓫ Median age. The median age for that county's residents.

⓬ Income 2007. Income figures are presented in terms of both per capita income and median household income. Per capita means per person. Per capita income for a county represents the total income of county residents divided by the number of county residents. Household income refers to the sum of money received in the previous calendar year by all household members aged 15 and older, including those not related to the householder, as well as persons living alone and others in nonfamily households.

⓭ Pop below poverty level. The percentage of the population that falls below the amount of income designated as "poverty level." Poverty thresholds incorporate a number of varying factors such as family size, age of householder, number of children under 18, etc., and are updated annually to reflect changes in the Consumer Price Index.

⓮ Personal per capita income 2007-2010. This figure is calculated by the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis and represents the personal income of residents of a given area divided by the resident population of the area (based on the Census Bureau's annual midyear population estimates). The per capita income data produced by the Census Bureau includes only income that is received by individuals in cash and its equivalents, whereas the personal per capita income data produced by the Bureau of Economic Analysis includes other types of income as well (e.g., employer contributions to private health and pension funds, Medicaid or Medicare payments, food stamps, etc.).

⓯ Unemployment. The percentage of the county's residents who are unemployed. (Persons are classified as unemployed if they do not have a job, have actively looked for work in the prior four weeks, and are currently available for work. Persons are considered employed if they did any work at all for pay or profit during the previous survey week, including part-time or temporary work as well as regular full-time, year-round employment. Persons are also considered employed if they have a job but did not work during the survey week due to illness, vacation, etc.)

⓰ Change from 2007. The percentage of change in unemployment from 2007 to 2010.

⓱ Median travel time to work. The median amount of time that it takes county residents who are 16 years of age or older, and who do not work at home, to get from their homes to their places of work.

⓲ Working outside county of residence: The percentage of residents who work in a county other than the one in which they reside.

⓳ Cities with pop over 10,000. If a county has five or fewer cities with populations above 10,000, those cities are included here in descending order of population. If a county has six or more cities in this category, the cities are listed on page 31 under the heading Cities with Populations Over 10,000.

Foreword

It is my distinct pleasure to introduce this directory of the counties of the United States. County governments are a unique form of government in the federal structure. Counties were one of the first forms of local government established when colonists settled our country in the 1600s. County governments are thriving today and meeting the needs of Americans with a wide range of services.

Counties are diverse. They are called parishes in Louisiana and boroughs in Alaska. The officials that lead county governments are called commissioners, supervisors, police jurors, council members, county executives and freeholders.

Their populations range in size from nearly 10 million in Los Angeles County, California, to fewer than 100 people in Loving County, Texas. Two thirds of the counties in the U.S. have populations less than 50,000. There are many smaller counties, but most of the people live in the 200 largest counties.

Counties are created by and carry out responsibilities for state governments. For that reason, the roles and responsibilities of counties vary from state to state. In the northeastern part of the United States, the role of county governments is limited. In fact, Connecticut and Rhode Island do not have county governments.

There are geographical boundaries for counties in those states, but no working county governments. But in the south and the west, counties have considerably more authority and responsibility because of the large areas of unincorporated land. Counties in those areas also provide more services to their residents. The services provided by counties include courts and corrections, record keeping, solid waste management, road maintenance, elections, health care, planning and zoning, libraries, emergency management and public safety. As counties have grown in population, the responsibilities have grown as well. Many counties are now providing recreation and parks programs, transportation systems, recycling programs and homeland security.

County names are interesting to study. Counties are named for U.S. Presidents, early leaders of our country, those who fought for independence in the Revolutionary War, Native American names, and families and locations in the old country, wherever that may be.

The leading name for counties is Washington. 31 counties are named for the first President of the U.S. Not too far behind is Jefferson with 28 counties and Franklin County with 25 counties named for the third President and the author of the declaration of Independence. Tied at 24 are Jackson County and Lincoln County. Twenty counties are named Madison and 18 are named Montgomery.

The list of county names runs from A to Z. Abbeville County, South Carolina is the first. Ziebach County, South Dakota is the last. In between are Yazoo County, Mississippi; Wirt County, West Virginia; Transylvania County, North Carolina; Otter Tail County, Minnesota; Love County, Oklahoma; Eureka County, Nevada; and Bee County, Texas.

This directory lists all counties and is an excellent source of basic information about counties. You can learn more about each county by going to the county's Web site, a link to which is included in each listing.

You can also learn more about counties through the National Association of Counties (NACo). NACo is the only national organization representing counties in the United States. It is a full-service association that provides legislative, research, technical and public affairs assistance to county governments. Created in 1935, NACo continues to ensure that the message from the nation's counties is heard and understood in the White House and Congress. To find NACo's Web site, go to www.naco.org.

Learning about counties is great fun. I hope that you find the directory interesting and informative.

An Overview of County Government

Forty-eight of the fifty U.S. states have operational county governments. Connecticut and Rhode Island are divided into geographic regions that are called counties but don't have functioning governments. Alaska and Louisiana have county governments but they call their counties boroughs and parishes, respectively. Counties vary greatly in size, ranging in area from 26 square miles in Arlington County, Virginia, to 147,843 square miles in Yukon-Koyukuk Census Area. Counties also vary greatly in population – Loving County, Texas has just 82 residents, while Los Angeles County, California has 9,818,605. On the whole, county populations are not exceptionally large. Counties with populations under 50,000 accounted for nearly two-thirds of all county governments in 2010.

Counties trace their roots to the English shire of a thousand years ago, which acted as both the administrative arm of the national government and as the citizens' local government. The colonists along the eastern seaboard of North America adopted the structural form of the shire and adapted it to suit the diverse economic and geographic needs of each of the colonies. When our national government was formed, the framers of the Constitution did not provide for local governments. That was left to the states, and early state constitutions generally conceptualized county government as an arm of the state.

After World War I, with the growth in population and development of the suburbs, the government reform movement strengthened the role of local governments. Post-World War II urbanization brought changes in structure, greater autonomy from the states, rising revenues, and stronger political accountability, and counties began providing an ever-widening range of services.

Traditionally, counties performed state-mandated duties, which included assessment of property, record keeping (e.g., property and vital statistics), maintenance of rural roads, administration of election and judicial functions, and providing relief for the poor. Today, counties are moving into other areas as well, with programs relating to child welfare, consumer protection, economic development, employment and training, planning and zoning, and water quality, among others.

Service delivery responsibilities vary widely among counties. For example, construction and maintenance of local roads is one of the primary duties of most counties, but North Carolina counties have no responsibilities in this area. In addition, the mix of services often involves shared responsibilities with cities. In Indiana, cities and towns provide police protection only within their boundaries, and the county police (i.e., the Sheriff's Department) handle calls in the unincorporated areas (although all police units are expected to provide mutual aid when needed). Similarly, cities and towns handle their own planning, zoning, and building permits, while the county provides these services in the unincorporated areas.

The three basic forms of county government are commission, commission/administrator, and council-executive. Under all three, many administrative responsibilities are vested by state constitution or statute to independently elected row officers (e.g., clerk, coroner, sheriff, and treasurer). With the Commission type of structure, both legislative authority and executive powers are exercised jointly by an elected commission or board of supervisors. (Although governing body members are most frequently called commissioners or supervisors, these are not universal titles in Louisiana, for example, governing body members are called parish police jurors, and the county governing body in most New Jersey counties is the board of chosen freeholders.)

Under the Commission/Administrator form of government, the county board of commissioners appoints an administrator who serves at its pleasure. That individual may be vested with a wide range of powers, including the authority to hire and fire department heads and to formulate a budget.

The separation-of-powers principle forms the basis of the Council-Executive system of governance, in which a county executive is the chief administrative officer of the jurisdiction. Typically, he or she has the authority to veto ordinances enacted by the county board (subject to their possible override) and hire or fire department heads.

Although most counties still operate under the commission form of government, more than 40 percent have shifted to either the county administrator or the elected executive type. State policymakers have contributed to this trend, as Arkansas, Kentucky, and Tennessee now mandate that an elected executive head counties in those states.

The states also dictate, through state constitutions and statutes, the revenue sources counties may use. Barely half the states allow counties to impose a sales tax, and a tax on income is a significant county revenue source only in Indiana and Maryland. Nevertheless, taxes are the number one revenue-generating source for counties, with property taxes accounting for the single most important revenue source. (However, for the 25 largest counties, state aid provides a larger percentage of revenue than property taxes.)

County expenditures fall generally into the areas of education services, social services and income maintenance, transportation, public safety, environment and housing, and general governmental administration. In addition, to fulfill their service responsibilities, county governments employ millions of professional, technical, and clerical personnel.

Continuing to provide these services when states are experiencing budget problems has not been easy for county governments. According to a survey conducted in 2011 on the budgetary crisis facing counties, 65% of the responding counties have experienced revenue shortfalls, and 26% of those stated that their state either proposed cutbacks or has cut back on funding for state-mandated programs.

This overview is based on information provided to the editors by the National Association of Counties (NACo).

Introduction

Counties USA provides statistical, descriptive, and contact information for the 3,140 counties and county-equivalent entities in the United States. Similar information is also provided for the 50 U.S. states and for the United States as a whole. Statistics presented in Counties USA include data from the U.S. Bureau of the Census, U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, and U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis.

What's New in This Edition

This fourth edition of Counties USA contains more categories of information for each county listing than previous editions, as well as additional statistical tables and other new features.

New information provided for each county includes:

1. Population per square mile
2. Estimated population in 2010
3. Percentage of population increase or decrease from 2005-2010 (as well as from 2000-2005)
4. Personal per capita income
5. Change in unemployment from 2007 through 2010
6. Percentage of the county's residents who work outside the county
7. Cities within each county that have a population of 10,000 or higher

Statistical tables are included in this edition for 23 categories of data—more than four times the number included in last edition.

Other new features in this fourth edition of Counties USA include:

1. A table that lists the cities in each county that have populations greater than 10,000
2. A listing for the United States that contains the same types of data found in the county listings, which can be used to compare county or state statistics against statistics for the country as a whole
3. A feature that lists all Counties Associations in the U.S., with addresses, phone and fax numbers, and websites given for each association
4. Enhanced state maps that pinpoint the location of every county seat

Counties and County-Equivalent Entities

Forty-eight of the 50 states have governmental entities that operate at a county level. Alaska and Louisiana call their county-type governments boroughs and parishes, respectively; Connecticut and Rhode Island are divided into geographic regions called counties, but these regions don't have functioning governments as defined by the U.S. Census Bureau.

The 3,140 county listings in this directory comprise the following entities:

- 3007 counties
- 64 parishes (Louisiana)
- 16 boroughs (Alaska)
- 11 census areas (Alaska)
- 42 independent cities

The parishes of Louisiana were originally formed as ecclesiastical districts of the Roman Catholic Church under Spanish rule. Today they function the same as counties, as do the boroughs of Alaska. Cities that have consolidated government functions with their surrounding counties include Jacksonville, FL (Duval County), Kansas City, KS (Wyandotte County), and the Alaskan cities of Juneau, Sitka, and Yakutat (with counties by the same name). Of the 42 independent cities listed, 39 are in Virginia; the others are Baltimore, MD and Carson City, NV. Independent cities function with an autonomy similar to counties, but legally they are separate entities from the counties in which they are located.

Arrangement of Information

Information in Counties USA is organized by states, with the following types of information included for each state grouping:

1. A state map outlining the names and boundaries of the counties and statistically equivalent areas for each state. Each state map also identifies the county seat for each county.

2. A brief listing for that state, with a number to call for general information about the state; the state's website; and statistical data in the same categories as the data provided for county listings.

3. Detailed listings for each of the counties/county equivalents in that state, including contact and statistical data as well as some descriptive information.

Content of Counties Listings

Information provided for each county includes:

Contact data. The name of the county seat and its address and telephone number; fax numbers and county websites also are given as available.

Description. A brief description of the general location of the county, as well as other background information such as dates of incorporation or organization, if available.

Name origin. Historical notes on the origin of the county name.

Area. Total county area in square miles, along with separate figures for land and water areas. This edition also gives the population per square mile in each county.

Statistical data. Includes population and related data as well as statistics on income and employment. The specific categories in which statistics are provided in this edition are described in detail in the sample entry inside the front cover of this book.

Definition of Terms

Statistical data provided in several of the listing categories are identified as median figures (e.g., median age, median income). The term 'median' refers to a value such that half the data in the population set is above that number and half is below it. This should not be confused with mean, or average, which is the sum of the data elements, or values, divided by the number of data elements in the set.

Income statistics given in Counties USA include both per capita income and personal per capita income. Per capita income data are produced by the U.S. Bureau of the Census and include only income that is received by individuals in cash and its equivalents. Personal per capita income is calculated by the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis and represents the personal income of residents of a given area divided by the resident population of the area (based on the Census Bureau's annual midyear population estimates). Personal per capita income includes not only cash income or its equivalent, but also Medicaid or Medicare payments, food stamps, employer contributions to private health and pension funds, and similar forms of compensation.

Statistical Tables and Other Special Features

As noted at the beginning of this Introduction, this edition of Counties USA includes 23 separate Statistical Tables, which are presented as a group following the main body of listings. These tables provide rankings for various types of population, income, and employment statistics, as well as lists of counties ranked by total area and a list of the most common names for counties in the United States.

Features included in this edition of Counties USA include: a table that lists for each applicable county the cities in it with populations greater than 10,000; a United States listing containing the same types of data found in the county listings, which can be used to compare county or state statistics against statistics for the country as a whole; and a list of all of the associations of counties in the U.S., with addresses, phone and fax numbers, and websites given for each association.

Index to Counties

All of the counties and comparable legal entities listed in Counties USA are interfiled alphabetically in the County Index located at the back of the book. Index citations include the telephone number for each county, together with a reference to the page on which that county's listing appears in the main body of the book. (A detailed state-by-state list of all counties in Counties USA is provided as part of the book's table of contents.

Acknowledgments

The editors are grateful for the cooperation and assistance provided to us by representatives of the U.S. Bureau of the Census, the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, and the U.S. Bureau of Economic Analysis. Special thanks are due the National Association of Counties (NACo) for providing information for An Overview of County Government, and to Larry E. Naake, Former CEO of NACo for writing the foreword to Counties USA.

Cities with Populations over 10,000

Counties that have more than five cities with populations above 10,000 are listed here, together with the names of those cities and their populations. Information is organized alphabetically by county names in state-by-state order. The cities are listed in ranked order under each county's name, beginning with the city having the largest population.

If a county has five or fewer cities with populations in excess of 10,000, that information is provided within the individual county listings in the main body of the book.

Broomfield was the only city in CO to lie in portions of four counties (Jefferson, Adams, Weld, and Boulder), which caused problems for local residents in accessing services. Consequently, on Nov 3, 1998, the City and County of Broomfield was created by constitutional amendment. After a three-year period in which to organize, it became CO's 64th county on Nov 15, 2001. The US Bureau of the Census recognized the new county in Feb of 2002, and its census status will become official after the 2010 Census.
